Tom Wolfe and Amy Wang, the Oregonian
Media Relations and Info Sharing in the Digital Age

The Oregonian's Metro South bureau chief Tom Wolfe is a fourth-generation Oregonian and graduate of the University of Oregon. He spent 20 years as an editor at newspapers in Denver and Seattle before returning to Portland in 2004 to become Clackamas County bureau chief of The Oregonian.

Amy Wang is an assistant bureau chief in The Oregonian's Metro South bureau in Oregon City. She edits the Clackamas County Community News section and co-edits the Southwest Community News Section. She also blogs for The Oregonian's parenting blog, Omamas. Her reason for becoming a journalist was "because I was and am an idealist who thinks the free flow of information can only help the world."
